Extensive book is a great resource for mountain flying technique and concerns. The author is often repetitive, particularly if you're reading the book from beginning to end, but this is useful if you're only reading particular sections. And what he repeats are principles that should become a part of your psyche as a mountain flying pilot.

In Mountain Flying Bible, he wrote, "Fly an altitude equal to one-half of the distance from ground level (not MSL) to mountaintop level. Flying at this altitude does not and cannot guarantee the absence of turbulence, but it does provide a guarantee that you would avoid all destructive rotor turbulence."
