But part of the blame also comes from poets themselves, the author writes, some of whom “go out of their way to make their poems difficult if not downright discouraging,” in an attempt to impress the poetry critics. He notes that too much of the poetry published today has to be explained or taught.

"The Poetry Home Repair Manual" | Poetry Center

"With The Poetry Home Repair Manual, he turns to teaching us what poetry is about, Kooser-style. Much of it appeals. His attitude that 'poetry is communication' is refreshing in an era when so many poets seem to be babbling to themselves, giving us pages ripped out of their narcissistic diaries. . . .
